JUNGLE RUINS WRITE MAYAS' RICH HISTORY

Flight Over Central America, Guided by Col. Lindbergh, Reveals Rare Finds

MIAMI, Fla.-"With an airplane we have accomplished in less than days what, on the ground, with abundant capital and good fortune, we could hardly have accomplished in less than five years." In these words Dr. Alfred V. Kidder, director of the division of historical sciences of the Carnegie Insti-tution of Washington, summarized the fruits of his recent flight over the Mayan country of Central America and Mexico with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

The multimotored plane, capable of landing on the ground, on a salt-water inlet or on the surface of a hidden lake in the heart of the jungle, with its continuous contact with the outside world by radio, has been demonstrated by this expedition, Dr. Kidder pointed out, to be an exceedingly powerful instrument in the hands of scientific exploration. The return here of the Sikorsky amphibian with such treasure is re-phibian with such treasure is regarded as marking the Pan-American Airways airport in Miami as the base from which later and perhaps even more important expeditions will be undertaken into Latin-American regions now almost unknown.

For a generation or two archæologists have considered the Mayan to be the outstanding early civilization of the American continent. They knew that these people, who antedated the Christian Era, covered the territory now embraced in Western territory now embraced in Western Honduras, British Honduras, Guate-Honduras, British Honduras, Guate-mala and the Mexican states of Chiapas, Tabasco, Campeche and Yucatan on the peninsula of Yucatan, Explorative work of great value has been carried on at Copan in Hon-duras, at Uaxactun and Peten in Guatemala, at Chichen Itza, Uxmal, Guatemala, at Chichen Itza, Uxmal, Labna and Coba in Yucatan and at other points. At each place the archæologists have made and worked in clearings walled in by the almost impenetrable jungle. They guessed at the historical richness of the whole Mayan territory from the little they had uncovared in its isolated parts. Then Lindbergh flew the Si-korsky amphibian plane with Dr. Kidder and Dr. Oliver G. A universal language, however, would be merely one of the steps along the road to international unity. Sir Arthur Salter, director of the economic and financial section of the League of Nations, speaking on Brit-ish unemployment said that the world as a whole was definitely better off than before the war. The causes of Britain's industrial troubles were, firstly, that trade is not a luxury but a vital necessity to this country which therefore suffered more than others from the increased hindrances to foreign trade since the war. This was an evil which could only be dealt with internationaly. Secondly, there was the inelasticity of Britain's economic system, which impeded read-justments to meet changing world conditions. This was a national matter. Thirdly there was the fact that the British burden of taxation was the highest in the world. Lastly there was a series of special causes such as the industrialization of the East, development of oil and expansion of ship building.

He said one should avoid "thinking of co-operation and competition as rival systems, one of which must be right and the other wrong." Cometition must continue and be so lirected that waste, injustice and friction were not caused, but instead there should be a general increase in prosperity:

$200,000,000 in Food and Soap Combine-R. C. A.-Victor Gets Radio Work

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-What is intended to be the biggest merger of food-pro-ducing concerns in the world has just been instituted by the National Company in the merging of the Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation, the Hershey Chocolate Corporation the Colgate-Palm Olive-Peet Company into an organization having assets of more than $125,000,000.

The aim back of the merger is to food companies and the ultimate con-solidation of producers of food, soap and tollet articles into a single concern with assets in excess of $200,-

The new company will be similar to standard brands, the holding con-cern organized by J. P. Morgan & Co., to control the Fleischmann Company the Royal Baking Powder Company, and E. W. Gillet Company, Ltd., of Canada, with total assets of about

Simultaneously a joint announce ment was made by the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company and the R. C. A.-Victor Corporation, that an agreement had been effected by which the former concerns have ceded to the R. C. A. Victor Corporation all rights in patents on home entertainment appliances manufactured by them. The agreement covers research, manufacture, sales and dis-

This is regarded as the most important agreement of its kind ever effected in the radio manufacturing world and means employment in the plants of the four companies 20,000 or more workers. The agree ment also provides that Camden, N. J., shall be the manufacturing and distributing center of the radio products of these companies, which means that Camden will become the chief seat of the radio industry in Negotiations with three other companies, it was said, are now being carried on by the National City Company with a view to completing as soon as possible the $200,000,000 merger. No name has yet been announced for the new organization, but it was understood that, like the companies included in the standard brands merger, those of the new merger will retain their identity, the company being formed mainly to effect economies in purchasing and distribution.

The Hershey Chocolate Corporation, with assets of more than $25,-000,000 was established in 1893 and has a large plant at Hershey, Pa., and several sugar plantations in Cuba. The Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation is controlled by Selected Industries and other holding companies, having total assets of more than $38,000,000. The Colgate-Palm Olive-Peet Company was formed in 1928, when Colgate & Co. was merged with the Palm Olive-Peet Company with assets in excess of $62,000,000

"Since the purchase of the Victor Talking Machine Company," said the radio announcement, "plans for the manufacturing concentration have been under way and have now developed to the point where consolida-tion of facilities with the Camden plant is desirable. ## Artist Illustrates New Way to Fry Egg

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU CHICAGO - Something new cooking is on display at the Art In-stitute of Chicago. Though countless eggs have passed through countless kitchens, it has apparently remained for an American artist to point out a new process. From time immemorial eggs have been cracked before frying but here, beautifully done in oils, is an egg depicted in the skillet with the gas turned on, all ready to fry whole and unbroken.

To the practical home-maker this novelty is perhaps the most engaging novelty is perhaps the most engaging picture at the annual exhibition of American oils and sculpture which for flood control; trees for the temuntary service for the public good, Hinchey told the independents that opened at the institute this week. After 275 years of continuous development in Mexico, the Spaniards moved northward to present-day California. Thereafter, for a period of 75 years, they were the chief factors, social, industrial, commer-cial and religious, in that part of the country. ### there was a United States. In the Days of the Dons

In those days there were two types of structures being built in California-the missions, and the ranchhouses of the land barons. Through a desire to settle the Americas with Spanish people, the king had given to certain of his subjects huge tracts of California land. These tracts, in time, became feudal estates. Over them roamed tremendous flocks and herds. The center, from which life on these huge estates radiated, was the case de campo"-the farmhousedesigned and built by its aristocratic owner after the manner of his native land and, as in the case of the missions, always with a patio.

Those days of the Dons in early California have the traditions of open-handed hospitality. The country vas new, and had no communication with the outside world. There were no hotels and therefore the case de campo of the land barons, and the missions of the padres, furnished the only accommodations that were anywhere available. And all this open-handed hospitality centered about the patio.

Gas for heating is undoubtedly quite the ideal fuel, used in any type f heater, and where it is available at a reasonable rate, the automatic control makes it not too far out of reach. It burns only when it is needed to keep the temperature at the desired degree and on mild days

Oil heating apparatus, using an electric motor for forcing the draft, has been perfected to a point where it is thoroughly practical for almost any type of home. It can be used with any kind of heater with a properly lined combustion box, and is supplied from a tank, usually buried in the ground outside and alled regin the ground outside, and filled reg-ularly by the local oil cappany.

Suppose your room needs yellow walls to reflect light and bring in an appearance of sunshine; and sup-pose that yellow is the one color that you do not like and that you think is unbecoming for a back-ground. Some plan must be devised. A deep cream wall will reflect the ight, and glass curtains of ecru or gold will help to make the light seem warmer. You might even use peach for that has some of the sunny qual ties of yellow, and then you could work the rest of the decorative scheme around it.

If there is a cold north light, you will want to use warm, cheerful colors. If there is only one window, and that shaded or dark, you will want to use light tones that will seem to draw in the light from outdoors. There are ways around all these problems, though sometimes it takes quite a bit of work to find the correct answer.

Books on old furniture which are made up almost entirely of illustrations seem to be liked best by the public. Usually these works cost from two to four times as much as this. At the much lower price of $7.50 these 400-odd carefully titled and dated pictures offer the public a good bit for their money.

Only about one-tenth of the book is text, but within that space I regret to notice that Mr. Cescinsky has added to the confusion of names for chairs and desks. I doubt if any good purpose can be served by his trying to place slat-back and banister-back and Windsor chairs as all three in the Windsor class. The distinctions already accepted through-out America may be muddled for illinformed people by this suggestion, but those who accept it will probably be few.

He also attempts to fasten the English term "bureau" onto an American desk. It is true enough that "desk" needs a qualifying adjective to make clear which one of several kinds is meant. Still, it does seem both unwise and useless for him to try to attach the name "bureau" to slant-top desks. Americans apply it to a chest of drawers, as do dictionary makers.

Stuart Sherman was born in Iowa in 1881 of Vermont stock. Several boyhood years were spent in California, and one winter in an Arizona mining camp. By the time he was 13 he was back in the ancestral home of Dorset, Vt., where his Grandfather Pratt was the village minister. "Arizona Pete," as the boys called him, went to the Dorset village school, then to Troy Conference Academy at Poultney, then to the high school in Williamstown and to Williams College. By the time he was graduated from college he knew that he wanted a teacher of literature. There were three years of graduate work at Harvard, where he came in contact with some strong personalities, none more influential in molding his thought than Irving Babbitt.

From Professor Babbitt Sherman derived a belief in the vital relation between books and life, between literature and the great central currents of thought. From Babbitt, also, he drew a profound respect for teaching when it is done with all a man's heart, passion and strength.

Sherman first taught at Northwestern University, but shortly went to the University of Illinois, where he remained until he gave up teaching in 1924 to become editor of Books, the

Palestine Remembered

HERE was an element of good fortune in the lot of those men who were sent to Palestine during the war, though the base camp at Kantara was the dreariest waiting room in the world; for here they found themselves taken to the spiritual roots of their civilization. There was an inclination among those the breathing of that air. whose imaginations had been captured to call themselves "Crusaders" until political considerations forbade the word. The popular national mem-ory did not perhaps go back so far as the days of the Byzantine Empire, when the Greek Orthodox Church disliked the Crusaders as much as the Moslems, but "Crusaders" was a dangerous word. However, there was plenty of peaceful waiting in the Palestine campaign, and the old reli-. gious associations had time to grow. It was not long before the Old Testament became the most popular book in the trenches. It was discovered

How many men felt as deeply as Edward Thompson is another matter but he has written a book which hile it owes its origin and some o its background to the war, rises with the serenity of memory clear above it and must embody the common biding emotion. It is a book which those who knew Palestine in or in war will want to read. If the narrative has a certain tedium which may be felt by those who do not know the country, it has also a rare quality as of very high air. Above all it is animated by a profound feeling for the significance of this land, pleasant unctuousness. Mr. Thompson had arrived to find himself among the semblance of an English spring. There were yellow bloomrape, stock and tiny white marguerites near Ludd, lupins and vetch, trefoil campions, marigolds and poppies. Larks were singing and marting nesting in the old trenches. "The skies were English skies that spluttered with rain." One felt in one's heart, and not merely intellectually, the criminal horror of war when one saw men fighting in meadows and gullies of wild flowers that might have been one's own

Some will say that this is no discovery; that artists and football players have always been marked by their long hair. These protestants are clearly out of order, and their remarks are immaterial, irrelevant and frivolous. The condition they describe belonged to a bygone age We remember the age very well; but we have gone on observing since

Here are some of the things we have observed: Formerly it was dif-ficult to know, when you saw a man with long hair, whether he was a football player, an aspirant to the title of artist, or an actual artist. The real artist, of course, has never thought about his hair until his wife led him to the barber. But today, the football player is close-cropped, and tistic to look like a player in a jazz band than like Liszt. So that young man-or man who stays young-has his locks trimmed round the edges and slicked down with stacomb. Thus matters have been made simple for the observer.

At first glance, this solution may seem to leave us with another prob-lem: How is one to know a gentle-man from an artist? But this diffi-truthful, that she looks up to the little too long—just enough to make it look correctly sloppy, like a well the book to parents selecting suitable the castes, to the discerning eye, are easily distinguishable.

If the gentleman happens also to be a busy man, so that he forgets his haircut for longer than he intended, there develops a certain class fusion —or at least an alliance. For when the patrician adds to his natural indifference to appearances, an actual forgetfulness due to preoccupation with more important matters, he thereby aligns himself to a degree with the artist.

The House of the Native Student

THE "House of the Native Students, new to the city and in many cases to the Spanish language, are on part of Mexico's many-sided plan for the betterment of the large inert mass of her Indian population, will soon show its practical results. The first contingent of students have graduated and have been sent back to their homes and to others of their race in the hope that they will stir up a desire for modern progress in their native communities.

The school was founded at the beginning of 1926 by the Mexican Ministry of Public Education. About 200 Indian boys between the ages of 14

They were selected from rural schools which have in recent years spread over most of the country, from those who had already gone through one or two years of such rural education and who could therefore already read and write. They were picked from purely Indian regions, and generally at least two of the same race were picked.

The primary motive of the school, in the words of the director, Enrique Corona, is to eliminate the distance that separates the native, neglected

In the school-home they learn soap making, tanning, canning of fruits, vegetables and meats, carpentry, iron work, mechanics, and other trades by which they may earn their living. The students have a co-operative society which uses the income from various products made and sold for the pur-chase of raw materials for further production in the various minor in-dustries practiced.

The boys are taught to be self supporting as far as their life in the school-home permits doing their own laundry, housekeeping, repairing of furniture, truck farming, and other necessary tasks. Interesting also is the little observatory erected on the roof of the high school. The chemical and the physical laboratories offer the boys the best opportunity for independent investigation. Each pupil has his own place for his work, and direct supply of gas helps him in the practical application of his knowledge. Varied use of electricity can be observed in this new German model school.

Learning the Names of the Capital Letters

Toronto, Can.

N EARLY acquaintance with A words, with writing, and with numbers is invaluable to the child later. I have found that the child from 3 to 5 years of age may be taught to read, write, spell and do number work by means of playgames. To give an idea how naturally these worked out and how Mary, aged 31/2, learns as she plays, I am telling just what happened.

It began with her eagerness to ecognize the letters, and her calling the S a snake, and the T a mustin man with a tray on his head. Her mother offered to teach her all the letters in this happy play-way, and a box of glitterwax was bought. The next day Mary had her first lesson. Here is the way it went:

was Mary's first greeting on opening the new toy; but when a pink stick was taken out, and began to grow flexible in the warm hands of her mother, Mary's enthusiasm knew no bounds. Swiftly a blue stick was selected by Mary and following the movements of her mother, this was rolled into a long snake and then shaped into S, T, O and C, then D, G, and so on.

It is not by chance that the Bible opens and closes upon the thought of light; not by chance that we learn first that the presence of God brought light "upon the face of the waters"; not by chance that we close the book on the record of the Holy City, lit with eternal day because the glory of God lightens it. All through this account of progressive revelation, the thought of light, the symbol of light, is inseparable from the unfolding knowledge of the Most High. "And God said, Let there be light." That is the first word recorded for moon, wear now a coronal of stars. "And God said, 'Let there be light.'"
That is the first word recorded for us. "And there was light." Thus according to Genesis begins the knowledge of men of the ways of God. Dublic must have formulated its A large group of Frank W. Ben-among others. The Macbeth Galleries public must have formulated its own opinion about the provocative, ubiquitous modernists, those limelighted leaders of twentieth-century art that arise so spontaneously in Paris, and practically nowhere lesse. If the Fifty-seventh Street gallery-goer is still undecided about his lery-goer is still undecided about his feelings in these delicate matters, it is through no fault of those Manhat-tan avances and dealers who continue to promote the interests of modern art with increasing fervor. By now, it would appear that these Old World leaders of the new art are or world leaders of the new art are very much old friends. The novelty of the attack is gone these several seasons. Practically clinching the issue for the moment is yet another comprehensive showing of "Matisse et al" brought forward, this time at the Reinhardt Galleries. This third october gethering of the modernists. October gathering of the modernists contains some 70 well-selected items freshly culled from the Paris marts. and bearing special emphasis on Modigliani, who happens to be the latest importation set down for in-tensive championing and publicizing. Modigliani is something of a problem to explain to those who still consider art from the representational standpoint. Today, when inventive-ness of form and treatment is the issue at stake, the literally inclined has to do a lot of uphill sledding in order to get anywhere at all with all these newly minted masters. And yet, looking at the handsome decora-tion "Rain in the Jungle" by Henri-Rousseau (the Douanier) in the Reinhardt collection, a work that probably caused the painter's contemporaries to take special umbrage, it is hard to imagine that it could ever have been other than acceptable and appealing. It seems today such a simple exercise in form and color.

Amusing, Whimsical But, for my part, the Reinhardt exhibition offers an exhibarating excursion among the men of the moment who are boldly concerning themselves with images and inventions of a new order. What if Dufy's water colors do not look like every-day Paris? Are they not amusing arrangements of lines and color areas, whipped together with a brush stroke that is as pulsating as the beat of some modern dance tune? And then the delicate phantasies that Marie Laurencin turns out in praise of pastel tinted maidens, are they not whimsical enough and sufficiently dainty to evoke high praise by fastidious seekers after the rarer aspects of beauty? Picasso's handsome "Harlequin" that has the place of honor, takes a little more doing to undertand. The time-honored theme of Pierrot & Co. must be felt to apreciate the curiously unreal, rather unruly study that this painter has achieved, with its streaks of pink and

There is probably a greater change in the character of the American sec-tions of these annual expositions since their initiation in 1896 than in the European, although, to be sure, there has been enough of change in the developments everywhere to allow an enormous latitude. The Europeans struggled through many a vicissitude, fighting down opposition that balked at every fresh idea, making a place in the picture market for the novel things. They developed a system of æsthetics, prepared a new vocabulary, built up a literature that justified every move in their course. They did all this and more. The outstanding result today is the fact that uminaries of 30 years ago are still added, that fads have worn out, and that we continue to judge a picture contains more than 1600 works. Until the fashion, with a name or two that alone which is contained within the frame.

American Freedom The Europeans had a strong tradition to defy when they glided into some of the easier paths of modernism; the Americans were in their in-tancy artistically, nurtured with all he new fangled ideas: not all Amercans, of course, for some had been brought up in the warm, even temperature of the academy where no chilly wind or devitalizing heat could upset their balance. Timing Film Laughs

Timing Film Laughs
In filming the sound-film version of "Rio Rita," Luther Reed hit on a means of timing the humorous quips so that the spectators' laughter would not continue so long after a joke that it would blanket the next jest and so it would blanket the next jest and so make it unintelligible. On the stage comedians vary their stage business o that no quip is lost in the laughter over the one that preceded. So Mr Reed hired a laugh chorus of 100 av erage theatergoers to watch the film-ing of the scenes by the "Rio Rita" comedians, Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey. The results are regarded as satisfactory in their timing of the audience's audible responses.

their allied arts.

Then Ernst Křenek and Paul Hindemith, two of the most gifted among the young generation, were again attracted by the problem of setting up a new form of opera that would replace the Wagnerian and post-Wagnerian music drama and comply with the tendencies of our own period.

Hindemith, with his "Cardillac," gave the example of "absolute" or pure music in opera—an experiment vastly interesting but doomed to remain an experiment in that it contra-dicted the necessities of the stage

Křenek, with "Jonny spielt auf," seemed to have set an example allow ing of further evolution-an opera minus pathos, in an idiom which element serviceable to serious stage purposes, and with a plot and basic idea that conformed with the outlook and anti-romantic tendencies of the new generation in Germany. A way seemed found at last, and though it was not an ultimate, definite solu-"Jonny" had seemingly estabtion, "Jonny" had seemingly established the type—the new, "objective," un-romantic opera.

Three New Operas

But within the last few months we have seen three new operas come and firmly establish themselves as outstanding successes, each of a different type, each almost equally successful, and barely one of them in keeping with the theories which Křenek's "Jonny" had seemed to for-ward. Hindemith's "Neues vom Tage," produced at Berlin, adheres to the "pure music" theory of "Cardillac," though an added satirical, grotesque element helps to bring it nearer to the twentieth century viewpoint than its predecessor.

Isromir Weinberger's opera "Svanda the Bag-pipe Player," is of the purely romantic sort that had seemed obsolete in the light of "Jonny." An opera of popular Czech melodies in Smetana's vein, with all his roseate romanticism, but strong enough in musical inspiration to win enormous popular favor outside of the Slavic countries as well. Pitched in this consistently high key, panegyric becomes provocative. One found oneself almost willfully referring to the opposition. There was the English composer, Cyril Scott for instance, to whom—on the au-thority of his biographer, Dr. Eaglefield Hull-Romain Rolland's demigod gives an "unpleasant sense of childishness." To Scott, we read, Beethoven seems to have lived in an unfortunate age-to have been a great man born at a time when musical expression was somewhat childish. He tried to break away from this, but the barren age was too strong for him. Apart from Beethoven's last string quartets, Cyril Scott cannot feel any enthusiasm for his compositions. They seem bald and thin, striving to be grand and majestic, which they surely were in their day, but sounding in our present time (1921), too obvious and often banal."

Spots on the Sun

Again, one recalled John Ireland's cautious centenary "Speech for the Opposition" (Music & Letters). While protesting his admiration he, mentions, almost casually, Beethoven's "extreme subjectiveness and seriousness, coupled sometimes with a cer-tain triteness of material which is so often relentlessly developed to its ut-most logical conclusion"—a process, by the way, which always arouses in Romain Rolland an ecstasy of appreciation. And among other peccabili-ties Ireland points out that Beethoven's "endless repetitions in form his inexorable insistence on cadential points, his long development sections and codas often seem to detract from the effect of even his greatest works. So, after all, there are spots on the sun, although one feels that if the author of "Beethoven the Creator" were an astronomer he would never allow on his sun anything so derog-atory as spots. ## MONTANA HAS POOR OUTLOOK

Conference Football Record Is One Defeat and a Tie —Defeat Outsiders

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR MISSOULA, Mont .- When the football season opened here, Maj. F. W Milburn, head coach of the State University of Montana football team, knew what he was talking about when he said "We will need every minute of practice possible to develop a fair team this fall." So far this season the team has not done much as far as football in the Pacific Coast Conference is conin the Pacific Coast Conference is concerned, haying lost one game and tied another. On the other hand, Montana has succeeded in running up good scores against "outside" teams such as Anaconda, 18 to 2; Mount St. Charles College, 18 to 0; and Intermountain Union College, 45 to 9.

The games in the Conference were played against University of Washington, in which game both teams managed to score a touchdown, but both failing to make the point after. The other Conference game found Uni-

BOTH major-league presidents have Barnard of the American League saying that his league's successes in recent World Series' competition shows it is at least 20 per cent stronger as a whole World Series' competition shows it is at least 20 per cent stronger as a whole than the National, and John A. Heydler of the older circuit defending by saying there is no material difference in the strength of either league. One thing is certain—that a seven-game series between the leaders of each league furnishes little material for basing arguments either way. The only satisfactory way to judge such a case would be to have all the clubs listed in one league and run out a 154-game schedule to see which finish nearest the top. But that is impractical.

President Heydler of the National President Heydler of the National League probably hit the nail on the head when he said that in the long run the World Series' competition evens up between the two leagues. In other words, the American League seems to predominate at one time; then the National. At present the younger league possesses the World Series' spotlight. The next two to three years may find the older circuit regaining some of its lost prestige in series games.

STOCKS HIGHLY IRREGULAR AND SALES SHRINK

Support Evident but Hangover Liquidation Causes Further Unsettlement

NEW YORK-Trading in stocks today returned to normalcy. Price movenents were irregular. Stocks were ofments were irregular. Stocks were of-fered on bulges, from which it was in-ferred that commission houses were quickly completing adjustment of mar-ginal accounts. The volume of sales was about 50 per cent smaller than yesterday, and while the ticker dropped behind the market, it was never seri-ously late.

were accepted as selling opportunities, but volume of offerings at no time rose to serious proportions and stocks were readily absorbed.

Cotton and grain were steady. Wheat was 1½ to 1¾ cents a bushel higher, while cotton was virtually at the previous closing levels. Quotations for European exchanges held around the final rates of last night. In South American exchanges, however, Argen-ine pesos dropped to a new low for he year, far below the gold point.

Money Decidedly Easier Money Decidedly Easier

One of the troubles of the market appears to be definitely behind it, namely, the establishment of tight money, attended by mounting brokers' loans. The money market appears to be definitely in a down trend. Call money is now lending 2 per cent below the rate of a year ago, and acceptance rates have been cut for the third time this week, with the result that short maturities are under the 5 per cent mark.

Of course it must be admitted that the size of brokers' loans had caused greater apprehension in the market than rates paid for money, and in that connection it is to be borne in mind that one factor tending to prevent a decline it loans is the coaseless stream.

that one factor tending to prevent a decline in loans is the ceaseless stream of new stock issues. Much new financing of that character is yet to come, despite the huge volume already issued so far this year.

For instance, rights to approximately $400,000,000 of new stock issues will expire next month, and the shares issued will be financed partly through loans. If, however, the public comprehends that such stock financing tends to keep up the volume of loans and offset liquidation in old stocks, the sentimental effect may not be serious.

Another point to bear in mindis that volume of credit outstanding in itself is not necessarily evidence of a strained credit situation. The credit market was tighter a year ago than it is today, as evidenced by higher interest rates then ruling, although the volume of credit then outstanding was much smaller. Brokers' loans today are nearly $2,000,000,000 higher than a year ago.

No Bear Market Foreseen That a sustained bear market will be substituted for the five-year bull movesubstituted for the five-year bull movement is by no means a necessary sequence to the break in stocks. A period of recuperation lies ahead, and it will take time for those hurt to recover. Moreover, until the outlook for business and credit 'becomes clearer the desire to take the risk of bullish operations in stocks will be small.

It is generally conceded that the real test of how well the stock market has come through its trial will be made in the next several weeks. During that in the next several weeks. During that period investors and speculators will have to absorb stocks dislodged by the have to absorb stocks dislodged by the present shock, but not yet on the market, while shares bought to support prices will eventually be sifted down.

A reassuring factor is the outlook for money. Obviously the stock market is going to require less credit and business also has passed its peak demand for funds At the same time the mand for funds. At the same time the Federal Reserve banks are buying bills at the rate of $20,000,000 or so a week as they have been doing since last August and as they probably will continue to do for a while.

Underlying Conditions Sound Underlying Conditions Sound

The banks owe less to the Reserve System than they did at this time last year, and money rates all around are lower. An early reduction in the New York Reserve Bank's discount rate is a lively possibility. Easy money

market.

The concensus of opinion of those industrialists and bankers who are the acknowledged leaders in their respective fields is that underlying conditions are sound, and that there is no good cause for pessimism. There is nothing more now to suggest a business depression than there was before the market break, which was due patently to an overextended speculative position.

nothing more now to suggest a business depression than there was before the market break, which was due patently to an overextended speculative position.

Whatever may be the uncertainties over stocks, the bond market acts as though it were definitely beaded higher. Prices have advanced without interruption for the last three weeks. But it will not do to assume that the country has turned its back on common stocks. Stocks are merely being appraised with more regard to intrinsic value than market performance.

Huge Bank Clearings

Bank clearings today were close to a record with a total of $3,015,000,000, while balances also were extraordinarily large at $355,000,000. Ordinarily no such high figures are seen excepting at the year end. They reflect the stock exchange last Thursday and throw an interesting sidelight on the magnitude of market operations on that memorable occasion.

U.S. Steel Earnings

The September quarterly statement of earnings of the United States Steel Corporation will be issued next Tuesday. As usual, Wall Street is trying to guess the figures.

In quarters believed to be fairly well informed, it is estimated that third uarter net will be around $66,000,000, ompared with $71,995,646 for the June uarter, and that earnings available or the common stock will average bout $5 a share.

quarter, and that earnings available for the common stock will average about $5 a share. Besides announcing earnings and about $5 a share.

Besides announcing earnings and dividends, the directors are expected to reveal what disposition is being made of the company's option to buy the Columbia Steel Company, whose plants are located on the Pacific coast.

BUSINESS IRREGULAR, SAYS TRADE TRENDS

Business continues to follow an irregular course, with declines in some lines partly offset by gains in other directions, says Trade Trends, published by the Exchange Trust Cempany of Boston. In a number of major industries, operations have slackened following an extended period of exceptional activities.

WORLD REVIEW OF BUSINESS AND FINANCE

Boerse Shows Improvement

The New York crash was not so keenly felt on the Boerse at Berlin as in the markets of London and Paris. German stocks have been under some pressure for a protracted period, though, and it is believed that prices are now near the bottom. This opinion became more evident as this week drew to its close, and the market became firm, with some stocks showing siderable advances.

Steel demand in the United States continues somewhat lower, although

Stock Market Gets Hard
Blow—Business Remains
Sound, Say Bankers

The action of the New York stock market, reflected throughout the entire United States, completely overshadowed all other developments in business and finance this week.

In the most violent shaking out ever witnessed in the markets of this country, losses piled up high into the billions.

In Thursday's trading, differences between high and low prices averaged 40 points. Transactions involved approximately 13,000,000 shares, and stock tickers ran four hours late.

Bankers, meeting at the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co. to discuss the situation, expressed the opinion that the crash in security prices was due only to technical causes.

Brokers' loans this week declined $167,000,000 to a total of $6,634,000,000.
Call money rates have been at 5 and 6 per cent during the period, and anouncements of reductions in rates on acceptances were made Thursday.

The slump in Wall Street was reflected, of course, in the leading European markets, and particularly at London stock market recovered however, late in the week, most of the late of the week conditions improved.

Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. Bestrides Country

Colossus of Retail Enterprises, With Sales Exceeding Billion-Expansion Continues phrase.

The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company is beyond doubt the best example of the chain store idea in its mature flowering. It has attained a distribution of its products so wide-spread, and disposes of so enormous a quantity of food that it has entered into the very fabric of the country's economic life.

Largest Cash Business In World

It is estimated that the chain store turnover in the United States is between $8,000,000,000 and $10,000,000,000, or around nearly 20 per cent of the total estimated retail trade. As the Great Atlantic & Pacific is handling an estimated gross of between $900,000,000 and $1,000,000,000, or one-tenth of the entire chain store business, it is undoubtedly doing the largest cash business in the world.

No exact figure of the number of retail stores today operated by the company are available, but it has been placed between 17,000 and 18,000 stores. New stores are being opened steadily as satisfactory sites are obtained, and at the present rate of growth, it will not be long before the company has 20,000 units in operation. It has been stated that the goal of the company in United States and Canada is 25,000 stores. Through the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Ltd., a subsidiary, a chain of stores is gradually spreading throughout eastern Canada. There are about 100 of these in Montreal and about as many more in other cities of the Comminion.

Rapid Sales Increase

Rapid Sales Increase

Much of the food distributed by the company is produced or prepared in its own factories, bakeries and canneries. It has some 50 large warehouses which are centers for stores within radii of 50 to 100 miles. One such, for instance is the largest print 8912 such, for instance is the largest print butter plant in the United States, located at Springfield, Mass., and the distributing center for some 3000 "A. & Postores throughout New England.

The spectacular sales increase of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company chain is seen in the accompany ing table, showing gross volume for the last 12 fiscal years ended approximately Feb. 28.

By G. R. ERICSON

The most tremendous retail enterprise in the world today, far overing the nearest competitor both in the number of stores it operates and in the extent of territory it covers, is the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tead and almost affectionately labeled, the "A. & P."

There is hardly a city or town on the American continent that does not boast the familiar store with the characteristic red front in whose windows are to be found, tastefully displayed, the daily necessities of millions of families, and it is probably safe to say that the daily necessities of millions of families, and it is probably safe to say that the phrase.

Teachers Praise Higher School Age

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BURKAU LONDON-Referring to the impending raising of the school-leaving age in Britain at the annual conference of the National Federation of Class Teachers, L. Grudgings, the incoming president, said that "the additional year cannot be regarded except as part of a four-year course. The provision of separate buildings and staffs would be uneducational. Continuity in the plan and work of a post primary course is essential." Mr. Grudgings said that the curriculum should tend to be less academic and that the particular bent of 130 West 42nd St., N. Y. C. WISCONSIN 1169 a child should have fuller play, even to the extent of restricting the num-ber of subjects he studies. An ex-CUSTOM dressmaking and first class remodeling. ANDREATTE, Modiste, 1368 Beacon St., Brookline, Mass. Aspinwall 7449.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.—Rubane's Lingerie Shop; dresses made of your own material at moderate prices. 2nd floor, 71 North Ave. tension of experimental curricula would meet with success.

"The social value of the reform," said Mr. Grudgings, "is as important as its educational value. Only a minority of children have hitherto en joyed an extended school life. But the need of the others has in reality been for Reliable Attendants Edgecombe 1772—New York City greater. They are the majority. They are more difficult to arouse and slower to respond. In many cases, not always, they are slower to assume responsibility and diffident in taking the initiative. We admire their sincerity and their devotion to their tasks, and it is a great gratification to us that it is this great body of children that it is to benefit." The conference unanimously passed a resolution urging the Government to back up the raised leaving age by sufficient grants from the Exchequer to enable local authorities to make extended period of schooling profitable to the children and of real advantage to the community.

CHICAGO business man of mature years, feeling that his husiness could spare him for a time, enrolled at the Art Institute. He had always loved painting, and this was his first opportunity to devote himself to it.

He enjoyed the work thoroughly, but what impressed him most was the earnestness of some of his young fellow students. He was particularly touched by two boys who were carrying on the work with very little money, yet with much determination. One day he stepped into the busi-ness office of the institution and quietly handed over a check. He wanted the office to take it and apply it on the tuition of the two boys. It would give them each a year's clear sailing. But there was one condition—the lads must never learn where the money came from. The secret has been kept, but the anonymous scholarships will long be remem-bered.

Every now and then the Art Institute gets these anonymous gifts from donors too modest to let their names be known, said Miss Florence Odell, assistant dean. One woman gave Miss Odell $25 to use whenever she found some student who needed it. That wasn't hard for the assistant dean to do. The sum looked large indeed to a student who was barely managing to pull through. Not long ago Miss Odell received another $25 check. It came from a girl previously helped. She was now a teacher, she wrote, and earning. She couldn't pay back that money, "for it is now invested in me," she

A Verdict for Good Government

THE conviction in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia of Albert B. Fall, once a United States Senator and afterward Secretary of the Interior, of the acceptance of a $100,000 bribe in exchange for the lease of the Elk Hills Naval Oil Reserve to a speculative oil promoter, is a notable vindication of the law. It will still for a time the anarchistic cry that men of means and influence cannot be convicted of crime. It will lay new emphasis upon the responsibility of public officials for the honorable conduct of their offices. It will demonstrate the efficiency, in this one notable instance at least, of the law-enforcing agencies of the Government. It may perhaps check the notorious tendency of the more conscienceless practitioners of big business to look upon the public possessions of the United States as reservoirs of wealth which they may tap for their own benefit by any practicable, even though criminal,

Viewed coldly, with an eye single to the wellbeing of the Nation, with thought alone of the maintenance of higher standards of official integrity, the case of Fall might be regarded as in the end a useful incident of American public life. That as a result of the exposures of the faithless handling of the Government oil reserves the Nation recovered fully $30,000,000 in money and saved for its own use two public properties, estimated at a value of $100,000,000 each, is perhaps the least significant phase of the affair. What is advantageous, what will unquestionably exert in future a marked influence upon public life, is this determination that the law of the land is adequate to bring to justice men who have committed crime against the body politic, no matter how wealthy and influential their associates may have been, or how lofty their official positions.

Traffic Tickets: New Style

T WAS yesterday's traffic cop who, on being told by the driver of a fast-moving car that they were hurrying to catch a train, drawled, "Well, just wait a minute and I'll give you a 'ticket'." But today, your courteous traffic officer asks your name and address and invites you to call at the police station for a "ticket"-a "Safe Driver's Card.'

Such, at least, is the case in Evanston, Ill., where M. M. Kreml, director of the new safety bureau of the police department, is thus honoring and popularizing law observance. Careful drivers are watched, and their skill in averting traffic problems is rewarded. Here, at last, seems to be the proper emphasis. And as to its workability, one has only to turn to the United States Post Office in Pasadena, Calif., and note the improvement in service since the postmaster put up a sign asking that exceptional instances of courtesy on the part of employees be reported to him.

Politeness and safety go hand in hand on the highways. The gentleman may be delayed as much as ten seconds in pulling up to an abrupt stop to allow another to take the right of way, but he gets home whole and, better yet, with no depreciation in his manliness. In recognizing instances of this sort, Evanston should soon lead the Nation in motor safety.

Better Than Counting Guns

REAT BRITAIN'S decision to ratify the Arms Traffic Convention of 1925, however welcome in itself, is not likely to lead to the early enforcement of this treaty which so far has only been ratified by seven states out of the fourteen whose ratifications are necessary to bring it into operation. Some thirty-five powers, including the United States, originally signed the convention, but it was made clear by many of them at the time that they would not ratify until certain other questions, notably that of publicity for arms manufacture, had been satisfactorily settled. At present there appears to be no early likelihood of this.

The main trouble hitherto has been the reluctance of certain states to agree to publish the statistics of manufacture of armaments by government factories. Other states, particularly those which buy their armaments abroad and mainly from private firms, not unnaturally complain that the effect would be to throw a spotlight on their purchases while carefully covering up the tracks of those countries which make their own arms. Opinions differ as to the extent to which the Arms Traffic Convention of 1925 would promote the cause of peace. It is in no way concerned with reducing the output of weapons, but merely tries to regulate their distribution by forbidding importation and exportation without a license. No attempt is made to limit sales or production.

Some people even argue that it is undesirable to restrict sales on the ground that to do so tends to make it more difficult to overthrow an unpopular and illegal autocracy, and they point to the undeniable fact that the Greeks, Serbians, and Bulgarians would not have gained their independence from Turkey if such restrictions had been in force.

All things considered, the 1925 convention is a rather doubtful quantity at present, especially as Congress has definitely refused to ratify it, and without the participation of the United States it is a question whether the convention could be carried out. Moreover the almost universal acceptance of the Kellogg pact and the rapid spread of arbitration have shown a better way to the haven of disarmament than the somewhat dubious method of looking over one's neighbor's fence to count how many weapons

Regulations of the arms traffic is no doubt necessary, but positive methods of promoting peace are by far the best safeguards against war. Fortunately, there is good reason to hope that before long the rapid extension of peaceful means of settling disputes will make it possible to negotiate a new Arms Traffic Convention of a less complicated and controversial nature.

President Hoover and Waterways

TT WAS Herbert Hoover, the engineer, quite as much as Herbert Hoover, the President of the United States, who spoke at Louisville concerning the development and utilization of the waterways of the United States. The occasion was propitious. It was the celebration of the completion of the dams, locks and channels which open the Ohio River from Pittsburgh to Cairo on the Mississippi, a distance of about 1000 miles, and the modernization of the channel from Cairo to the sea, another 1000 miles. Distances in these United States are such as to make any parallel with the economic efficiency of the carefully developed systems of canalized rivers and canals in European countries misleading. Nevertheless, even the brief experience of the United States with its rivers properly adapted for heavy traffic has proved the economic value of water transportation.

President Hoover pointed out that in the socalled Golden Age of river transportation, joyously celebrated by writers of fiction and students of sporting chronicles, 500 tons was a tremendous cargo for a single vessel to carry. Today a tug or river steamer will push barges carrying 10,000 tons. The floating palaces of the days of the Show Boat and of Mark Twain's reminiscences drew two or three feet of water. The great river is now equipped to carry from St. Louis to the sea craft drawing nine feet. The Nation has been slow in the development of its rivers, a policy urged even by George Washington as a result of personal observations of streams which might be fitted for navigation, and thus far that development has been haphazard and ill-advised. President Hoover promises henceforth a definite policy with a continuing program for at least ten years to come, and the creation of a north-and-south trunk line with feeders rather than mere spotty construction of dams and channels which form no part of a scientifically planned system. On the Ohio alone, he points out that within twelve years the river traffic has grown from 25,000,000 tons to more than 50,000,000. It would seem impossible to overestimate the volume of traffic which should be carried by the entire Mississippi system composed of a great north-and-south trunk waterway from the lakes to the gulf, with tributaries reaching to the Alleghanies on one side and into the great farming districts of the Northwest on the other.

President Hoover meets the very natural query as to expense with the statement that to earry out the program so far as domestic waterways are concerned will cost not more than $10,000,000 a year, and if the St. Lawrence waterway to the sea is included, $20,000,000. He makes a telling reference to a subject very much in the public mind when he says:

This annual increase is equal to the cost of one-half of outlay on naval construction as the result of the forthcoming naval conference in London, nothing could be a finer or more vivid conversion of swords to plowshares.

As to the question of the operation and utilization of these waterways, he declares that it is necessary to continue Government barge lines through the pioneering stages, but expects ultimately to encourage the establishment of privately owned and operated lines and barges to take their place. The timidity of capital, with the adverse influence of great financial forces interested in railroads having suspicions of the development of water transportation, has always made difficult the establishment of barge or steamboat lines on the rivers. The Government, through the operation of what is known as the Warrior Line of barges, has made an extraordinary demonstration of the possibility of barge transportation, and of the practicability of developing it under public operation. Yet there is no desire on the part either of the Government or, we believe, of the masses of the people to have this public operation continued longer than is necessary to demonstrate to private enterprise, that an opportunity exists for profitable investment. It is obvious that it is the President's idea that ultimately the fleets which ply American rivers and canals will be privately owned. It is peculiarly fortunate that at a time when it seems that a great new impetus is being given to the development of water transportation the President of the United States should be one who has technical and professional knowledge of engineering problems and a personal interest in the utilization of waterways which enable him to speak with so much clarity and authority on the subject.

Give Slum Dwellers a Chance

RVERY country where industry predominates has its slum problem. And Scotland is no exception, as anyone who has trudged the Canongate of Edinburgh, the Gallowgate of Glasgow or the Overgate of Dundee can testify. There the slum is at its worst, but a brave attempt to abolish it is being made, and in Dundee alone a new housing scheme which will take 1500 people away from unsanitary surroundings to modern dwellings with plenty of air and light has been started. This is a commendable step and fispires the hope that there will arise in the new environment a better and more contented community. But that again is contingent upon surrounding circumstances.

Generally, where there are slums there are public houses. And the prevention of the growth of the one is no less necessary than the abolition of the other. It is the duty of the authorities to see that no licenses are granted for public houses in the newly settled districts, for failure to take such a precaution puts a severe strain upon the effort to improve the lot of the poorer classes. The fact that in isolated cases slum dwellers have not made the most of the opportunities afforded them is no more indication that they prefer dismal homes to clean, sanitary dwellings than that because a man is lowly he is necessarily low. Give the slum dwellers a chance. They will show that the confidence is not misplaced.

Helping the American Indian

TORK is to be tried anew as the solution V to the Indian problem in the United States. That is the key to the policy of the reorganized Indian Bureau of the United States Department of the Interior-a policy which generally found favor among those who attended in New York State the Lake Mohonk Conference on the Indian.

More vocational and less academic teaching to pave the way to prepare the Indian youth for a definite job is the definite end toward which the Federal Bureau is now working. It is proposed to follow this with an effort to find a job for graduates in the white man's world, where the red man may be assimilated, instead of being sent back to the reservation, where opportunities are few and tradition a handicap. There will be exceptions, of course, because, as the new commissioner of the Indian Bureau says, there are 353,000 Indians and almost as many problems, since each tribe, if not each Indian, is a case in itself. The Indian, even with an educational start, experience has shown, is not wholly fitted to stand alone. He needs a helping and guiding hand, as well as a sympathetic welcome, to steady and encourage him in his new environment. The effort will be to place groups rather than to isolate the individual, to encourage family life instead of loneliness.

There are 70,000 Indian children now being educated, most of them with parental permission. The policy is to keep them moving away from rather than toward the reservation, which, because of the blighting effect of government dole, is considered to have failed except to care for those who cannot or will not shake off the lethargy it produces.

When the final chapter is written in the history of the Indian question, the traditional interest of the Quaker will shine through it all.

From the early days when William Penn negotiated the famous treaty about which the Indians, with implicit faith in his promises, said, "We will live in love with William Penn and his children as long as the sun and moon shall endure," the Quakers have given freely their sympathetic offices. Alfred K. Smiley, a State of Maine Quaker, started conferences on the Indian in 1883 by inviting a number of men and women interested in the Indian to Lake Mohonk as his guests. This year Daniel A. Smiley, a brother, and his wife resumed the conference at Mohonk. A Quaker President has caused a reorganization in personnel and policies in the Bureau of Indian Affairs. He appointed as commissioner, Charles J. Rhoads, with J. Henry Scattergood as assistant. Both men are Quakers.

The Indian problem, so far as it is unsolved, is a responsibility that must be accepted to an embarrassing degree by the people of the United States. There are, to be sure, many extenuating circumstances, but the job of doing justice to the Indian has been and must be accepted and worked out by the people who have, by whatever right, assumed control. It is safe to say that the white Americans want to do their duty by the Indians, who are constitutionally entitled to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

The Helpful Reader

YOME weeks ago there appeared in these columns an editorial captioned "Dear Mr. Editor," being a discussion on the reasons for the kindly reception given by readers to casual excursions into fields of pleasant diversion, and the relative silence attending more formal, perhaps more substantial offerings. The editorial in question seems to have struck a common chord, for responses from friends have been received and published.

But the eddy stirred up by the prow of the first editorial is worthy of some little recognition. No newspaper can reach its full stature, or fulfill its high function as a reporter, expositor and interpreter, unless it has a devoted family of readers. It is the reader who in part edits newspapers. Thoughtful reading, helpful criticism, a word of commendation about a newspaper to friends and acquaintances. establish contacts that energize and inspire any editorial sanctum, and have their sure culmination in a more enlightened type of jour-

No paper can thrive in the face of the continued disapproval of its readers. Given their continuing approbation and loyal support, all achievements are possible. In this respect The Christian Science Monitor counts itself peculiarly fortunate.

Editorial Notes

Sports followers see in the get-together of Yale's athletic captains and faculty directors at a dinner next week a step taken toward better co-operation and understanding between the representatives of these two highly important sides of college life. This is, however, only one of many evidences now apparent, indicating that colleges will soon be producing fewer athletes as such and far more student-athletes.

One commentator has remarked that the only peace of any use is the peace coming through "security," and has suggested that the United States build what it will in the way of warships and let Great Britain build what she will. The world has had a bitter taste of this iron-walled security. Is that quietness peace, that rests behind big guns?

Governor Allen of Massachusetts has stated that back-seat drivers should insist that those with whom they ride should exercise proper care in driving. This may be the first-and perhaps the only-word spoken in defense of the back-seat driver, but it comes from an authoritative source.

That young aviator whose miniature plane remained aloft for almost fifteen minutes set up a record of which the inventors of the fullsized airplane would have been proud not so many years ago.

Looking for the European in America

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON

States, a whimsical impulse caused me to reply, "I am going in search of a good European." A Diogenes who wandered about Europe, not to find the traditional "honest man," but to discover the "good European," of whom we have lately heard much, would have to possess a powerful lantern; and, indeed, unless it had some of the qualities of Aladdin's lamp, his search would be in vain.

The good European, I asserted, lives in America; he does not live in Europe. In Europe there are Englishmen and Germans and Frenchmen and Italians and Spaniards, and more than a score of other varieties of human beings but there is no trace of a European-that is to say, a blend of all these races.

Even if we suppose the formation, politically and economically, of the United States of Europe, it will be iong before there is a racial evolution, and a common type of European citizen who may properly be called European be shaped. He would be a compound-neither Dutch nor Anglo-Saxon, neither Latin nor Slav. Whatever his actual origins, he would have to be influenced and fashioned by many civilizations; his literature, his culture, would not

It may be that at present Europe is too consciously nationalist to become European. Before Europe can be Europeanized, said a wit, it must be Americanized.

By this is meant that the American citizen, though he may be personally proud of his English or German ancestors, is in constant contact with immigrants and the descendants of immigrants from many European countries; and he becomes an entirely new kind of human being. It would not be straining paradox too far to describe him as the "good European," imagined by idealistic politicians, but nonexistent in Europe. So if Europe is ever to become European and be peopled by Europeans, it must learn to resemble, so far as its population is concerned, the United States of America. In that event, the real European will be characteristically American, just as the typical American of today is characteristically European.

A little later I found in the London Times a stimulating article on the United States of Europe by a man who, more than any other, can claim to be European. Prof. Salvador de Madariaga is the exception which proves the rule. He is an old acquaintance of mine, whose career in many countries I have watched with interest. His understanding of the French, the Spanish, the Italian, the British, and other European mentalities, is amazing. He is Spanish by birth, French by education, and before the war was a London literary critic. He was appointed to an important post on the Secretariat of the League of Nations at Geneva. Then he went to a chair at Oxford. He has written in three languages. With his keen intuitive intellect, his intense sympathies, his wide knowledge, he is, perhaps, the most cosmopolitan man I know. 1 1 1

The vital point which this exceptional European makes in his article is that there are "no Europeans in Europe." He speaks of the astounding variety of European manifestations. Europe, he says, is Chartres and Venice, Heidelberg and Seville, Amsterdam and Budapest, Cambridge and Toledo, Naples and Stockholm, Canterbury and

THEN I was asked why I was visiting the United | Cracow, Granada and Oxford, Copenhagen and Florence, and scores of other places of definite flavor, all different, rich, creative in a specific, unforgettable way, which is a revelation.

But in this Europe there are "the insular Britain, the olive-skinned Greek, the sharp-witted French woman, the Italian, proud of his new youth; the German, dreaming of rebecoming; the Spaniard, who has given up even his dreams; the Pole reborn, the Dutchman ever active, Swedes, Norwegians and Danes objecting to being huddled together as Scandinavians, and many more nations, very much themselves. But of Europeans, none. If we would see a European, an Anglo-Germano-Hollando-Italo-Franco-Scandinavian, with a strong Irish dash and a faint flavor of Spanish civilization in the distant past, we might as well board a liner and land in New York."

The imaginary man of New York, in Professor Madariaga's scheme, is a living compendium of the United States

A bulletin of the National Geographic Society gives an interesting comparison of the United States of America and the proposed United States of Europe. The European Federation would number no fewer than twenty-seven sovereign states, though Russia is omitted, and principalities like Monaco and Leichtenstein, San Marino and Andorra, and the free city of Danzig, are not counted. In area the United States of America would be one and a half times greater, but the citizens of the United States of Europe would outnumber Americans by three to one.

Texas, the largest American state, would be slightly bigger than France, the largest European state (excluding Russia). Luxembourg is likened to Rhode Island-the smallest American state. The compiler of these facts points out that California, Montana, and New Mexico are somewhat smaller in area than Spain, Germany, or Sweden; that Holland is larger than Maryland, that Finland would make three New York States, that Jugoslavia and Oregon are about the same in

But in the United States the average number of persons per square mile is thirty-five, whereas in Europe it is 127. In Nevada only one-seventeenth of a person occupies each square mile, while in Belgium 670-persons occupy each square mile. But this difference in the density of population is not complete, for Rhode Island and Massachusetts are more densely inhabited, according to area, than Great Britain or Germany.

These European nations have twenty-seven different tariff systems; they have twenty-six different money systems (for Luxembourg uses Belgian money); twenty-seven different sets of postage stamps, and twenty-seven different immigration regulations. In driving an automobile from one country into another, it is necessary to ascertain whether the rule of the road is to keep to the left or to the right. There even exist differences in railway gauges. The metric method which is widely adopted is not accepted by Brit-ain and the Irish Free State. There are many kinds of government—republican, monarchical—of many varieties—dictatorial, federal, etc.

To weld all these things into one system—to make a United States of Europe, peopled by Europeans—is obviously a long and arduous task.

Whither the U.S. E.?

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOB:

Having read with interest your editorial anent the Briand proposal for a "United States of Europe" and a previous editorial on "Letters to the Editor," I venture to suggest that M. Briand's principal object for the present is to preserve the solidarity of the allied nations, even by inclusion of the late enemy, which solidarity, in the event the recent settlement works out, may be expected to fade away in the natural course of affairs. Such a development would tend to lessen the present prestige of France in Europe and elsewhere.

The strength in M. Briand's suggestion lies in the fact that the allied nations have found that much common progress may be made through frequent conferences. The idea is not new; its aim has been emphasized in other developments in past history, and a very similar suggest was reported to have been made to the old Emperor Franz Joseph by a young member of his court at the time Bosnia and Herzegovina became a part of the old Austrian Emalthough this proposal related more particularly to the Balkans.

To think of Europe politically knitted together by state hood, after the fashion of the United States of America, is to disregard the fundamental elements of the Euro pean social structure and the habits of thought of various distinct types and classes of people who through centuries have built up varying types of association-governmentally and otherwise—and who look upon "the American experiment" with interest, often with awe, but very seldom with understanding. Its statesmen would be expected to follow Jeffersonian ideas of state sovereignty and make doubly sure the preservation of it.

To America the formation of such a confederation would be helpful if the proper spirit of co-operation predominated, and America can do much to make it so. A rededi cation to fundamental American ideals, constantly practiced in commercial intercourse abroad, would be decidedly helpful.

Unity of purpose would likewise be beneficial to the work of the League of Nations: such a "regional understanding" would aid the cause of peace, the promotion of commerce and application of efficiency to all activities, if the scheme is based, like the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, on the welfare of the individual, and

Solving the Forest Fire Problem

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

My attention recently has been drawn to an article capmy attention recently has been drawn to an article cap-tioned "Canada Seeks Way to Save Forests," published in your issue of September 10, referring to my research work along forest fire prevention lines on the United States side of the boundary. While the nature of my work has been correctly mentioned in the main, your correspondent has evidently had a mistaken impression as to my relations with the Canadian Government and also with the Cana dian Forestry Association,
While I am a member of the Canadian Forestry Association, I am not one of its executives. I also am a member of the Society for the Preservation of Canadian Forests, and one of its organizers. But I am in no way the accredited agent here of either organization. The objective of the Sothe Government in enforcing the laws for the removal of slashings, which become one of the greatest fire hazards, and to co-operate with other organizations having similar objects. The members of this group are not at present functioning as an organization, although through no fault of its organizers. The Canadian Forestry Association, through its board of directors at Ottawa, assumed to carry on the society's work.

My forest preservation research work here, where I have been some months, is being sponsored and financed entirely independent of the Canadian Government, the Canadian Forestry Association and the Society for Preservation of Canadian Forests. The work of my present associates and myself is purely individual and calculated to stimulate public interest on both sides of the boundary along international lines, and thus to aid as best we can our respective governments in the solving of the prevention feature of the forest fire problem.

I, in common with many forest lovers, am a free lance with a view of aiding our respective governments in solving the forest fire problem, especially in this "neck o' the

Why No Current Crime in News Reels THE following question comes to the editor of the Motion

Why are scenes of actual crime and actual criminals never used in news reels?

"The six newsreel companies never feature or refer to the current crime scandal whatever it may be. The chief objection to portraying actual crime in the news reels," according to Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, "as compared with imaginary crime used during the development of dramatic plots in entertainment pictures is that in real life punishment is never swift nor certain and, when it occurs at all would not be seen in the same picture with the crime itself. In the crook story as shown on the screen, on the contrary punishment follows quickly and certainly after the offense "Furthermore, current crime stories in the news reels would tend to feed the criminal's abnormal lust for pub-licity and to make him a hero surrounded by a halo of romance, thus setting a bad example to the youth in mo-tion-picture audiences."—The Motion Picture.

Ten Years Dropped

DID you read Sunday, under the picture of his first dirigible, Count Zeppelin's prediction back in 1909: may take ten years, but we will cross the ocean"? S. G. Weiler, who reminds us of the occasion and recalls the prediction, believes that had it not been for the war America would have seen its first Zeppelin in 1919. Ten years dropped out in progress in this one field which so commands interest, which is one of the first things Europe has gone ahead with.

Ten years dropped out of the world's advance, out of everyone's life, whether he was in the war or not even remotely connected with it. And this in the field of me-chanical progress where we are keenest on going ahead. How much time lost in our other ambitions, in our march toward better cities and better governments and better lives?... Is it any wonder people are displeased with those whose constant talk is that "we shall have more wars"? Is it any wonder there is support for every reasonable step looking toward peace?-Milicaukee Journal,

A Nation's Shrine

HOW well the Washington Monument fulfills its purpose as a national shrine is emphasized by a recent official report which shows that in the 41 years it has been open to the public more than 9,100,000 persons have visited it. On the average, more than 600 persons visit the monument each day. The record for a single day, suggesting that its hold on the public is still growing, was made on April 1 last when more than 10,000 persons went to the top.

It will be 130 years in December since Congress, upon motion of John Marshall, adopted a resolution providing for the erection of a marble monument in which the body of Washington was to lie. Nothing was done, however, until 1833, when Marshall, at that time Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and others organized the Washington National Monument Society. This organization raised $88,000 by popular subscriptions, and in 1848 the corner stone of the monument was laid. For six years the work dragged, and then a combination of circumstances halted further construction when the monument had reached a height of

In 1876 the enterprise was taken over by the Government, and work was resumed in 1880. The capstone was set in place in December, 1884, and the monument was dedicated in the following February. It was opened to the public in October, 1888. The monument has been aptly described as "one of the most stupendous works of man, and also one of the most beautiful of all creations." Despite erection of other memorials, the Washington Monu-ment maintains its hold on the public affection. . . . The continuous pilgrimage to it is as significant as it is interesting .- Ohio State Journal,
